HOUTS FOR CATTLE FOOD.-Roots, preperly managed, are the best crop a farmer can raise. More food can be produced by them on a given spot of ground than of any other crop. Roots, more than anything else, are the back-bone of English husbandry. They make the finest animals and the best meat at the least cost. Corn, the American staple for making mest, is a feverish food, and must have an effect on the flesh of animals fed on it, and this flesh doubtless has its effect on the constitutions of those who est it. We want more of the cooling and healthful influence of roots in the various phases of our diet. The food of a nation has as much, if not more, to do with the character of a people than anything else. Roots make tender and juicy meat, and such meat is more easily digested-Corn makes from and oily flesh, which lays the foundation for dyspepsia. English mutton is easier to digest and more palatable than American. Turnips make the difference. We need more succulent food for stock during our long and trying winters. With more roots there would be less constipation, barrenness, less abortion, less disease of nearly all kinds. Swedes, a very productive and excellent root. may be jut in up to the middle of July, and the flat turnips until the first of August. Swedes may be kept over until July. Fifteen and twenty tons can be put in after a crop of clover or early grain. The ground should be made mellow and rich with bern yard manure. Three feet apart is a proper distance for the rows, or they may be closer. A pound of seed is ample for an acre, when put in with a drill or one-fourth of a pound when dropped by hand sixteen inches apart Several seed ought to be put into one place to allow for files and accidents.

In a letter written by the R v. Dr. Shedd. from Hamadan, l'ersia, it is said that one of the eldest colosies of Jews is the world is found in Hamadao, Their accestors were carried captive by the Assyrian knig twenty five centuries ago. For some months past the colony has been agreed by the question, "Is not Jesus the Mers at?" Four of the chief men, the heads of one thousand houses, about five thousand popule, have, after long trial, been publicly baptized, and many others are asking to confers Carist. As in the days of the apostics, all the city is moved, and one Nesterian helper is day and night beset with Jews sceking instruction in the New Testament.
